STRANGE JOBS

A.

Edyta works as a professional sleeper in a hotel in Finland. Her unusual job is to test new beds and report how comfortable they are. Every night she sleeps in a different room and makes detailed notes about mattress softness, lighting, air quality and even the smell of the sheets. She also checks how easy it is to fall asleep and how relaxed she feels the next day. Although it may sound like a dream job, it actually requires discipline and concentration. After every stay, she meets with hotel designers to discuss possible improvements.

B.

Carlos is a storm chaser who travels across the United States following tornadoes, hurricanes and other extreme weather events. He works with a team of scientists and photographers, collecting weather data and recording videos that help researchers to understand how storms are formed. His work is really dangerous because the team often drives close to powerful winds and heavy rain. Sometimes, they have only a few minutes to escape before a storm changes its direction. Despite the danger, Carlos says the job is exciting and gives him a deep respect for nature's power.

C.

Naomi is a pet food taster working for a large company that produces snacks for cats and dogs. Her job is to make sure that each product is of good quality, in other words, she examines the smell, texture and even taste of the food to check if it's balanced and fresh. Although most people find her job strange, Naomi says the ingredients are completely safe and often similar to those in human meals. She works in a laboratory with veterinarians and nutrition experts, helping to develop new, healthier recipes for pets.

TYPES OF HOUSES

A.

Deep in the forests of Sweden, stands the Mirrorcube House, a small hotel room completely covered in mirrors. It's almost invisible among the trees because it reflects the sky and branches around it. Inside, the walls are made of light wood, and everything is modern but simple. Guests enjoy the feeling of privacy and calm, surrounded only by nature. It's perfect for people who want to escape from busy city life and reconnect with the natural world.

B.

In the deserts of Morocco, there's a hotel made entirely of sand. The walls, floors and even the beds are built from a special kind of sand mixed with water. Every few months, strong winds destroy parts of the building, and the owners build it again. Visitors say sleeping there feels like being inside a giant sculpture. It's an unforgettable experience for people who enjoy something truly unique.

C.

In Japan, many young professionals live in capsule apartments - small rooms the size of a single bed. Each capsule has air conditioning, a lamp and a small TV, but no bathroom. People usually rent them for a night or two when they miss the last train home. Despite the tiny space, these apartments are clean, quiet and surprisingly comfortable. They're a symbol of modern, fast city life.
